June 3-12: Brooklyn International Film Festival

Were it not a borough of New York City, Brooklyn would be one of the largest cities in the country with a population of about 2.5 million people. So why shouldn't it have its own film festival? 150 films are scheduled to screen at the Brooklyn Museum for the event's 8th edition. With the theme "Opinion 8" this year, the festival will in their words, present "a compilation of sharp, analytical, and original projects with an opinionated twist." Melissa Painter's "Steal Me," from Sundance, will open the event tonight (Friday).
